

NEWS AND IDEAS | INTERVIEWS | MINI CASE STUDIES | MULTIMEDIA | ABOUT

NEWS AND IDEAS

Twitter Roundup - September 3: Baby carrots, fuel economy labels, and design prizes for social good

September 3rd, 2010 | Contributors: Steve Spillman

@DesignObserver mentions the Curry Stone Design Prize in their rundown of #Design Prizes that award #innovation. <http://bit.ly/b6D6gW>

August 30, 2010 9:29 pm via web

currystoneprize
Curry Stone Prize

Last week, at the Venice Biennale, the Curry Stone Design Prize (@currystoneprize) announced its three finalists. Each year, the prize is given to an enterprising designer who harnesses the power of design for social good. This year's finalists are Maya Pedal, an organization that turns used bicycles into pedal-powered sources of electricity, Elemental, a Chilean design firm that's rebuilding shanty towns with smart floor plans, and Sustainable Health Enterprises, which designs feminine hygiene products made from locally-sourced Rwandan banana fiber.