

This Week

First Chicago Architecture Biennial is a First Chicago Architecture Biennial is a “website of experimentation” say curators

The inaugural Chicago Architecture Biennial opened its doors to press, when curators Sarah Herda and Joseph Grima explained the exhibition showcases architects who are carving out new approaches to practice. Also coinciding with the event, a non-profit business was awarded the 2015 Curry Stone Design Prize in Chicago for its contribution to humanitarian architecture as element of the event.