

Brainstorm: IDH's Weekly Impact Digest

MARCH 16, 2017

This week, we revisit issues of immigration and the refugee crisis, considering a plea for architects to abandon their design considerations of Trump's proposed border wall, a new app that helps those subjected to undocumented raids prepare to notify family, friends, and legal counsel, and a grassroots effort to build community and social networks in the refugee community over a simple meal.

CAN DESIGN CHALLENGE INEQUALITY?

In honor of the Curry Stone Design Prize's tenth anniversary, the nonprofit is honoring notable social designers each month in their Social Design Circle. The Prize focuses on a specific social issue each month and recognizes several firms whose work directly addresses the given topic. So far, this year's topics have questioned if designers should be outlaws and challenged the idea of a tangible "right" to housing. March's topic asks, "can design challenge inequality?" Read more about this month's honorees here or tune into the weekly podcast, Social Design Insights, which features some of each month's winners.
