

Design and Creative Placemaking

NEWS

from the National Endowment for the Arts

Newsletter February 2017

Greetings all,

This month we are sharing some new resources from the NEA along with interesting announcements and opportunities from the field. Also, don't forget about our upcoming Design Art Works deadline next week! Read on for details.

Nerdy Design Thing We Are Following

We love Curry Stone's Social Design Insights, a weekly podcast series started this year that asks provocative questions about the role of social impact design. Each week, selected design field leaders and thinkers share their insights about a particular topic, starting with Teddy Cruz and Fonna Forman on "Should Designers be Outlaws?"

And the District Architecture Center recently revealed the 2017 entries for their annual poster competition, celebrating Architecture Month in April. We love Xuesheng Song's winning entry, a simple but powerful representation of the Washington Monument in dialogue with its new neighbor, the National Museum of African American History and Culture.

In This Issue

NEA DESIGN UPDATES

Updated Arts Works Guidelines Coming So

Grant Highlight: Proactive Practices

Grant Highlight: Proactive Practices